SOME SHORT STORIES

Brief Tales and Incidents Picked Up About the City.

Rehearsing the Corbett-Mitchell Fight-How a Client Was Lost When Badly Needed.

There is a portion of this city's population whose theme of thought and of conversation at present is the coming Corbett-Mithcell fight. This portion is not influential in numbers, but it gets great the lives that the individuals lead. This portion consists of the street Arabs. Notice them in little groups and you will bewailing the fact that the shine had been rarely miss a squaring off or a fistic explanation of how "Corbett swipes wif his left." All nations are represented in the street Arab, and it is one of the peculiar | ent and omnivorous than any large bird points about them that at least one rep- | we have, though the pugnacious, bristling resentative of each nation in each gang and despised English sparrow may crowd bears a nickname that is suggestive of him pretty close on these points," said that nation; as for instance, "Irish" being | Dr. W. "Hippy" and "Indian" were at one time bitter rivals for the leadership of the gang. "Hippy" is an Irish lad of un-bolding the delicious morsel close to his breast by bending his neck and so flying known age, for the wealth of clothes and dirt make it hard to ascertain. "Indian" is a colored boy of the same shortness and toughness that characterizes "Hlppy." He was bedaubed "Indian" on account of his | and late in the afternoon fly back to his copper color. The squaring off and fistic explanations are never missed in this gang, and one day not long since the merits of pugilist Jackson came up in the discussions, and "indian" offered the information that he thought that "Jackson could wipe de stuffin' out of Co'bett." Why, de nigger would gets de daylight punched from him," replied "Hippy." 'Who'se yo' callin' nigger?" questioned

"Look hyar, white boy, I'll jump down yo' throat wif bof' feet." "Yes, yer will. I'll sep'rate yer from yer breat." "Will yo' fight?"

"In course, but not here 'cause they be too many cops 'round.' The gang was about equally divided in color, and each, of course, stood ready to help his champion should the other side make a break. One of the "push" of the gang suggested that the difficulty be settled in the large open ground near the power house of the Indianapolis Light and ower Company, at the intersection of the Vandalia railroad and Kentucky avenue. The suggestion was received with a hurrah, and away tore the whole gang toward the battle ground. Twenty in all, they rushed around Monument place, west on Washington street and down Kentucky avenue, carrying everything before them, "Hippy" and "Indian" being foremost in the rush. The numbers were rapidly increased by wideawake bootblacks and newsboys, who noticed that there was something unusual in the air, so that when the goal was reached the numbers had grown twice-fold

"Hippy and "Indian" stepped out after seconds had been chosen, and each eyed the other closely, while their backers formed a circle around them, leaving a fair-sized ring. "Hit 'im, "Indian," and "Smash 'im in th' jaw, Hippy," were echoed in many translations. The Vandalia railroad men, together with the employes of the power house, attracted by the unusual din, rushed out and urged the boys on by cries of "Go for him." They excused themselves for so ing because they knew that no harm d befall the tough little fellows. The did no good, and finally the rumpus were soon to be seen cairs while "Indian's" nose f." "Bang." "Right and left." "Where your Corbetts and your Sullivans?" conflict was rough and tumble, and ese was made din by the shricks of spectators. A number of side fights se over a difference of opinion as to the herits of the fighters. In the language of he small boy, "it was out er sight."

"Here's de cop," shouted an observant oot-black. That was all. So fast did they all fly away that four seconds later one could not have told that something un-usual had been happening except by a glance at the faces of the railroad men, who were convulsed with laughter. A day or two after the struggle the gang as to be seen in the Journal alley quietly alking over the previous fight and pugilisic matters in general as though nothing had happened. The settlement between "Hippy" and "Indian" could not be asceralned, though both were present and were operently on the best of terms with each

Hon. "Lafe" Pence, Populist member of Congress from Colorado, was in the city a few days last week visiting old friends. While here he told a good story on himself and Hon. J. N. Harding, which Mr. Harding has kept still about for several years. They were chums in college at Hanover, and after graduation determined to settle down in some border town, grow up with the country, and, in time, become great. After a careful study of the map, they finally hit upon Winfield, Kan., as just about the proper place to locate and become great. To Winfield they repaired. There was but one decent block in the town, and the only room they could rent in that was at the back end of the long corridor, with half a dozen lawyers' offices between It and the stairway. They rented it as the best that could be had, and sat there during five long months waiting for a client, and not a man darkened their door. Nobody could get past that long double row of lawyers' signs that hung and creaked at Frankfort Monday ... Jessie Case, of ominously between them and the stairway and effectually barred them from fame and fortune. One day was exactly like another to them, but one particular day Harding pulled out a well-thumbed pack of cards and a game of "freezeout" was soon in progress. As they were playing they heard heavy step on the stairway, but they had heard that sort of thing before and paid no attention to it. But as the footsteps continued, passing first one office and then of hope, long since dead, arose them. The cards shoved hastily fato their pockets and each seized a law book and began reading assiduously.

The move was made none too soon, for in another moment the door opened and a shrewd-looking Kansas farmer, faded overcoat, red whiskers and all, stepped in. "Lawyers, gents?" he asked. "Yes, sir, what can we do for you?"

both asked in one breath. The granger had been worsted in a "hoss trade," and was thinking about suing. Pence asked him to state his case and kept i dropping in a word here and there to encourage him in his good intentions. "It's the plainest case I ever heard of." he burst out at last. "Why, it's the easiest case to win we've had since we

Thus encouraged, the farmer continued with frequent words of encouragement from Pence. Finally, it occurred to Harding that he ought to help things out a little and he interrupted. "Held on a minute," said he. "Now you say this was so and so and we can do thus and so? "Yes," replied Pence. "You forget that that would be an action in tort. Now, we want to go at this in this way," and he proceeded to explain. The farmer looked at him a minute or two and then turning to Pence, remarked: "Partner?" jerking his thumb toward

"Good day," and the only client they ever had at Winfield put on his hat and departed.

Not many evenings ago a young man boarded a suburban street car, evidently en route to the home of his best girl, for his dress was suggestive of that painstaking and care generally indicative of such was the elegant shine on his shees. It is not known how many hours were lavished on those blackened mirrors, but they were magnificent, just the same. The car rapidly filled and was soon crowded. At last an old colored man entered accompanied by a hungry-looking dog that, in some way, had eluded the conductor's vigilence. dog crowded himself onto the floor at the youth's feet, and apparently lay unmindful of his surroundings. The destination was finally reached and the youth bounded up the steps of his best girl's home with beating heart. After an affectionate admittance, and while his overcoat and hat were being taken by his Best, he gave one quick giance at himself in the lookinglass. Eureka. He would be irresistible. Into the parior he went. He would trust just one glance at that shine and assure himself that all was right, when to his herror, he saw not the blackness of the shine, but instead, a dirty mud-color coating. An incoherent cry of pain brought his Best to his side. "I see it all," he bewalled, again prominence through its characteristics and | and again. "I left it behind in the street car." "Oh, Charley, do hurry and go get it." "You don't understand," and the rest of the evening was spent in relating and

And this brings me to the point of my story, which is that we have the performance du-plicated right here. I am not sure that it is going on so much this winter as for the two previous winters, not having had the same opportunities for observation, when thousands of them passed over the city twice every day. They came from the far northeast, passing over near headed for White the Panhandle shops. river, returning in the late afternoon. I never found out how long their trip is, but hope some one can enlighten us.

PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

Miss Lida Gilbert returned from Terre Haute Friday, where she went to take part in the regular Thursday evening lecture course, the entertainment consisting of recitations by Miss Gilbert and music. Press notices in Terre Haute papers were exceedingly complementary.

There was a very delightful meeting of the N. C. C. Club, held yesterday evening at the residence of Miss Julia M. Fish, on East Pratt street. Dinner was served at 5 o'clock, twelve of the club's members being present. The names of three new members were accepted for mmbership. President Scot Butler's usual term reception on Thursday evening to the college students was very largely attended. During the latter part of the evening a scene from Nicholas Nickleby was presented by disses Galvin and Johnson and Mr. Ed Cark. Miss Galvin made a very quaint and charming Mrs. Nickleby, while Mr. Clarke's rendition of the part of the crazy neighbor was original and extremely funny.

The chief amusement in Irvington during this week has been skating. Pleasant Run has furnished a fine stretch of ice and has been thronged with young people every Among the skaters are Miss Georgia Galvin, Miss May Reeves, Miss Bess Campbell, Mrs. Hilton Brown, the Misses Ida Snyder, Annie Butler, Nellie Douglas and Louise Brouse and Messrs. Al Somerville, Edgar Forsythe, Tom Shipp.

Detroit Free Press. It was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of New Year's day, when the wanderer knocked at the kitchen door, and the cook

"Can I get something to eat?" he said pleadingly. "Of course you can," responded the cook in great good humor. "Come in; we're keeping open house to-day, and you can get a feast fit for a king and wine to wash it down with.' He raised his hands deprecatingly. "Thank you," he said, "but I prefer the old layout of second-hand victuals I'm used to. I can live on that, and if I acquire the champagne and pie habit in my present circumstances, I'll be a starved man before the year's out," and the wondering cook
